Teddy Was Best Type 100 Per Cent American

Theodore Roosevelt was born in New York October 7, 1858. He was educated privately and at Harvard, from which he graduated in 1880. Then for a year he traveled in Europe and in 1881 published his first book: "The Naval War of 1812," which was characterized as all his subsequent works by creditable research, general accuracy and vigorous statement. He introduced into the assembly the first civil service bill passed in 1883. In 1884 he was chairman of the New York delegation to the national Republican convention. He was nominated in 1886 as independent candidate for the New York mayoralty, but, though he received the Republican endorsement, was defeated by Abram S. Hewitt, candidate of the United Democracy who was elected by a plurality of 22,000. In May 1889 President Harrison made him a member of the United States civil service commission. During his six years of incumbency he tried to apply the test of merit to all executive positions with the result that the commission assumed an importance which it has preserved to this day. This post he relinquished in 1897 to become assistant secretary of the navy to Hon. John D. Long in the first administration of President McKinley.
